ALAN TREIBITZ - CEO

Mr. Treibitz, CEO of Z-Axis Corporation, has been the executive producer for much of the company's major litigation work since its founding in 1983. Considered to be one of the leading litigation presentation strategists in the United States, he has worked on more than two hundred cases during his career. He has been a pioneer in the development of courtroom presentation systems and he holds a patent in the field of presentation technology for a method for controlling multiple remote display devices.

In the trials of Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols for the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, he worked as executive producer for the United States and designed or supervised most of the demonstrative evidence used in both trials.

During the last 10 years, he has worked on many of the largest intellectual property trials in the United States representing such diverse clients as Eolas, 3M, CobeBCT, Fonar, Gambro, Honeywell, Litton, Micron, Sepracor, Unocal and Xerox.

In aviation litigation, he has been involved in many of the major air crash cases during the past 15 years. These include the crashes of Delta 191 at Dallas-Ft. Worth, Continental 1713 in Denver, Avianca 52 in Long Island, Northwest 255 in Detroit, American 965 in Cali, Colombia, United 232 in Sioux City, Korean Air 801 in Guam and the July, 2002 mid-air collision of the Russian Tupelov aircraft and the DHL 757 over Überlingen, Germany.

Mr. Treibitz regularly conducts CLE seminars on the strategic design and use of visual communications tools in court. He has presented to the Conference of Chief Justices, the International Bar Association, the Royal Aeronautical Society, the Cambridge Institute, the Patent Resources Group and numerous legal organizations across the country.
